Art Start of the Day

This week in our art Start of the Day, we have been looking at a painting that once appeared in a well known children's television programme. The painting was 'The Sleeping Gypsy' created by Henri Rousseau in 1897.

Rousseau was largely a self-taught painter and in this masterful composition somehow uses hard lines and flattish perspectives to great advantage. The painting featured in an episode of 'The Simpsons' where Homer dreams of waking up in the painting with the lion licking his head.

We asked the children to be creative and think of the story behind the picture. Can you create a story at home?
